Hundreds of Travelers Flood OneSky Jet Network Seeking Private Planes During National Air Crisis

Tremendous Increase in Private Jet Demand; Requests Continue All Day Friday

MANCHESTER, NH -- (MARKET WIRE) -- August 11, 2006 -- From Los Angeles to Boston, hundreds of business and leisure travelers flooded the call center of OneSky Jet Network, www.OneSky.com, yesterday and today, the nation's only comparison shopping website for searching and pricing private jets, driving record booking requests and flight activity for the two-year-old private jet company.

"The flood of non-stop calls from across the country continued all day Friday," says Justin Sullivan, OneSky's Vice President of Sales. "We are literally receiving urgent calls from business people already at the airport, staring down a 4-hour security line, and in many cases arranging for a private jet to pick them up so they do not miss important meetings. In many cases, we are the only option."

"We are confident that we can satisfy demand today by virtue of OneSky's unique and proprietary booking system, linking North America's best private jet operators together into a cohesive network of over 1,500 business jets. While the current national air crisis is impacting both international and domestic flights in all major airports, OneSky is uniquely positioned to help ease the burden through our nationwide network with jets in all 50 states," explains Sullivan.

"OneSky's ability to instantly match travelers with carriers, even when clients and planes are in different locations, also is a reflection of the power of its proprietary booking engine which searches hundreds of available combinations in real time, with pricing determined through patent-pending algorithms that factor historical demand and adjust price based on market demand," says Greg Johnson, OneSky's CEO.
